WORKSHOPS & LEARNING

Learning, Sharing, and Passing It On.

For generations, people have learned from one another—through stories told, skills demonstrated, techniques practised and knowledge passed from one person to the next.

USP carries that very human way of learning into its work today—creating opportunities to learn through participation, practice and exchange.

What matters is not simply what is taught, but what people are able to do with what they learn.

HERITAGE GUIDE PROGRAM

Knowing Rakhigarhi. Sharing Its Story.

Who better to tell the story of a place than the women who call it home?

The Heritage Guide Program works with women from Rakhigarhi to deepen their understanding of the village's archaeology, history and heritage, while developing the skills and confidence to interpret it for visitors.

The program gives women a greater role in how Rakhigarhi is presented and understood, while creating an opportunity for knowledge of their own place to become a livelihood.

RESTORATION SKILLS

Learning Through the Haveli.

As the Rakhigarhi haveli and chaupal are restored, local construction workers learn alongside conservation professionals, developing and applying techniques for working with historic buildings.

The building itself becomes a place of learning, with each stage of restoration offering practical experience.

These skills remain with the people who learn them, extending the value of the restoration beyond the building itself.

CREATIVE EXCHANGE

New Ideas. New Directions.

Artists, designers and craft practitioners work alongside women in Rakhigarhi, bringing different skills and perspectives to the making process.

The women's existing knowledge provides a starting point. Together, they explore materials, techniques, colour, pattern and form—testing and adapting ideas through practice.

Alongside creative development, the aim is to strengthen the quality and appeal of the work, opening up market opportunities and the possibility of better returns for the women who make it.

STUDENT PROJECTS

Learning That Becomes a Contribution.

Students can contribute to USP's initiatives by putting their learning into practice.

One student's research into Rakhigarhi led to a series of short films created as learning resources for women participating in the Heritage Guide Program. A further Q&A film is being developed around questions visitors may ask.

What began as a student learning project became a resource that others could use.

THE AMBITION

Knowledge That Continues to Travel.

The ambition is for learning to extend beyond any one workshop, project or exchange.

Skills can be used again. Knowledge can be shared. Ideas can be adapted and passed on.

Over time, this can give people greater confidence to participate, contribute to their communities, and pursue new opportunities—including opportunities to earn a livelihood.

LEARN. CONTRIBUTE. TAKE PART.

USP welcomes students, designers, practitioners and others who want to learn through the work, contribute their knowledge, or share their expertise.
